

Care Not Cash picks up 1,700 clients

Every building has a 24-hour desk clerk, but none has food service, Walton said. "Case managers try to get them the food they need, and we have roving teams of professionals who can go to the hotels and help link people to services."

So far, 266 CAAPers have accepted housing in the SROs, he added. If the number seems small — since DHS says it has 1,600 units available — it's because those SROs had more than 800 people already living there when the Cash Not Care program started up, Walton explained.

Hardin's comment about post-placement isolation was still hanging in the air.

"How are you going to get these people integrated into the community?" asked Michael Nulty, co-president of Alliance for a Better District 6 and Tenant Associations Coalition program director.

"We'll try to house people near their friends," Walton said, "and we're going to try to build community within the buildings."

LADIES IN THEIR SCANTIES

The meeting closed on a sexier, if less conclusive, note.

"There are ladies in sheer panties and bras out on the street," said S.F. Rescue Mission's Clint Ladine, who stood and glanced across the table at his next-door neighbor, Terrance Alan, owner of the Chez Paree at 220 Jones.

"They're soliciting," Ladine continued. "Terrance assured us (activities inside) would not spill out onto the street. There's more than a strip joint going on there now."

Alan shot back: "I've told you that if there's a problem, you could always call me. And you haven't."

Whoa! said TLC Chair Glenda Hope of S.F. Network Ministries. She suggested that the topic appear on the October agenda.

"Amen," said someone at the back of the room. ■
